Re: EXPERT OPINION – termidetector in-house monitor system.

Dear Sir

In my capacity as an independent consulting entomologist, termite behaviour and termite management is a primary interest. I have qualifications and experience as an expert witness on termite management systems patents, expert witness for the Courts, Tribunals and Legal Services in litigation, a Co-Author of the timber pest curriculum for Queensland Open Learning Institute of T.A.F.E. and Qld T.A.F.E. Competency Assessor on timber pests.

I was first asked to review the efficacy of the termidetector in-house monitor system in January 2001 and have maintained an ongoing research of the systems' development and its introduction into the building and timber pest management industry.

The result in its adoption by industry and the general public has been a success as an innovative method, in conjunction with the need for regular inspections of all detection devices and systems for subterranean termite activity.

I continue to endorse the termidetector in-house monitor system as a reliable and proven method to allow ready access for visual inspection into a previously difficult area and provide detectable evidence of subterranean termite activity.

Yours sincerely

Christopher E. Langley
